

CALL FOR PAPERS

Rethinking inequalities: Theoretical and methodological questions of intersectional gender research

Since the concept of intersectionality was established in US-American problematizations of feminist anti-racist political practice (Crenshaw 1991; Combahee River Collective 1977), a broad spectrum of theoretical approaches, debates and different research practices has developed. The analysis of the interaction of gender with other categories and processes of inequality and their mutual conditionality is also productively taken up in the German-speaking context. This raises methodological, methodological and theoretical questions, including the transferability of the concept to different social contexts and academic disciplines - starting with the critique of "whitening intersectionality" (Bilge 2014) and the question of the meanings of the central category of race beyond the US context, as well as methodological developments in qualitative and quantitative research.

The examination of the concept of intersectionality as a theoretical approach and methodological approach as well as a power-critical instrument is productive, creative and challenging at the same time. Against this background, we invite submissions on theoretical and methodological issues of intersectional analysis as well as on empirical research results of interdisciplinary gender studies.

Possible questions/research topics in detail

- Which inequalities are included in intersectional analyses? What approaches are there that include structures and actions?
- How is intersectional knowledge generated in different contexts: be it in social and cultural movements, be it in gender equality policy activities, be it in everyday experiences and social institutions?
- What role does the material, cultural and social structure of a specific social space or field play in the arrangement and determination of situated structures of inequality?
- How does the power-critical claim of intersectionality research relate to the various methodological and theoretical challenges of intersectionality research that uses the concept as an analytical tool?
- How are social and cultural categories expanded and changed by intersectional approaches? How can processuality and dynamics in the reproduction of intersectional inequalities be conceptualized?
- How can quantitative and qualitative research methods be further developed to meet the theoretical requirements of intersectional perspectives?

About GENDER. Journal for Gender, Culture and Society

GENDER. Journal for Gender, Culture and Society was founded in 2009 as a journal on women and gender studies. The journal aims to cover a wide range of topics and academic disciplines in which gender issues are reflected. Given the journal's multi-disciplinary setting, we welcome analyses from, for instance, sociology, educational science, political science, cultural science and history which correspond to the interdisciplinary nature of gender studies. GENDER is published in three issues a year. Contributions to the free section are always welcome, irrespective of the focus of the special issue.
